Bonjour

I’m a freelance graphic designer based in France, I like experimenting and design things that infuse creativity, spark curiosity and visually translate my clients’ stories.

I enjoy tango, inline skating and mixed martial arts. My favorite author is Edgar Morin. I’m currently learning Mandarin and sometimes I create interactive installations and practice creative coding.

A JOYFUL IDENTITY TO PROMOTE SYSTAINABILITY

RUADE

RUADE is a local association empowering individuals and communities to create socially and environmentally transformative actions through social innovation and education.

In French, ruade means the powerful kick of a horse and also stands for Recherche Utile d'Alternatives Durables et Éthiques (Useful Research of Sustainable and Ethical Alternatives). The name captures both force and intention: a movement that disrupts with purpose.

I designed the brand identity and communication system for RUADE, translating their joyful, rebellious spirit into a dynamic visual language.

RUADE is a collective that likes to play, iterate, and change its shape. The identity is adaptable, expressive, and alive — it bends to the context without ever losing its untamed character. The identity celebrates transformation as a form of joy, embodying the energy of a community always in motion.

FORGING A UNIFIYING VOICE FOR POSITIVE IMPACT

Écocotte

Écocotte is a coworking space dedicated to supporting, promoting connecting on social entrepreneurship and positive impact within its local community in France. Designed as a collaborative hub, it connects local entrepreneurs, artisans, and creatives to share ideas, resources, and build meaningful connections.

I developed a brand identity and visual system that capture Écocotte's spirit of collaboration and craftsmanship. The identity celebrates the "maker culture" and the resourcefulness of entrepreneurs, with a distinct focus on "Made in France" values. The visual language reflects the energy of a community in motion: distinct elements coming together to form a cohesive whole.

Geometric forms of varied shapes and scales come together to create a unified whole, symbolizing how individual voices and talents can assemble into something greater. The result is a flexible and grounded identity that embodies Écocotte's community-driven mission.

HUMANIZING DIGITAL PARTICIPATION THROUGH ILLUSTRATION

Pollen

Pollen is an open-source voting management platform designed for associations and cooperatives. It provides a secure, transparent, and customizable system that simplifies collective decision-making.

I developed an illustration system that enhances Pollen's digital presence clarifying its features, guiding users through key interactions, and expressing the platform's values of cooperation and openness.

The visual language focuses on human figures, bringing warmth and accessibility to what can often feel like an institutional or intimidating process. By humanizing a digital tool, the illustrations transform voting into a moment of connection — collective, convivial, and empowering.

HUMANIZING DIGITAL PARTICIPATION THROUGH ILLUSTRATION

WID

WID (What I Did) is an open-source time-tracking software for small teams who want to manage their activities seriously — without being stressed out by overly complicated tools. Developed by senior engineers who were tired of bloated, over-engineered systems, WID brings simplicity and focus back to productivity.

I was brought on board to help the WID team stand out and better communicate their product in an increasingly competitive landscape. The identity centers on the idea of organized minimalism — where rigor is expressed through clarity and structure.

The visual language relies on strict, well-defined grids and a restrained typographic system, offset by dynamic color accents that inject energy and contrast into the overall composition. The result is a brand that feels both disciplined and distinctly human.

EXPLORING FORM, TYPE, AND COMPOSITION

Poster Collection

This collection brings together a selection of posters I've designed across various contexts—client commissions, personal side projects, and pure typographic or layout explorations. Each piece reflects a different creative intention, whether it's communicating a message, experimenting with visual rhythm, or pushing the boundaries of composition. Together, they showcase my evolving approach to graphic design and my ongoing interest in how type, color, and structure interact to create impactful visual stories.

DIZZY GILLESPIE

DIZ ALWAYS IMPRESSED ME

Diz always impressed me as not being 'dizzy,' if that means anything. Because as soon as you say dizzy, you get the impression somebody's being kinda flighty and not altogether, mentally. But man, it was as far from that as— anything in the world. I mean much deeper. And when you began to see where he was coming from, he's much deeper than anybody, even his contemporaries. Because there was a lotta guys at the time, young fellas, and all of them were on a giddy type of kick.

DIZZY WAS A LEGEND, MUSICALLY. HE WAS ALREADY A LEGEND AT THAT TIME.

When he did start the band, he called me, and we began to work together. His idea of a band at that particular time was to have Charlie Parker and Oscar Pettiford, Bud Powell and myself in that first quintet, that birth on Fifty-second Street. And as you know, the rest of it is history. That particular quintet, all of us, didn't play all together at one particular time, for one reason or another. But the first quintet did include Don Byas, Oscar Pettiford, Dizzy, George Wallington on piano, and me; and we played the Onyx Club.

DIZZY GILLESPIE

DIZZY GILLESPIE

Playing with Diz, man, every night, you never knew what was gonna happen. Those guys were just fantastic; he was fantastic. I don't wanna give him the stereotype bit, but Diz never played the same thing twice. Don't forget now, I was with him for the longest, for about four years. And, man, this cat didn't play nothing twice; it's incredible, it's incredible. Bird's another one; Charlie was
